The MYSTERY of the MAY BASKET

Petunia Pig smiled happily when she wakened that warm, sunny morning. It was a bright, sparkling first day of May. And it was the day of the May Party and Maypole Dance at school.

Then Petunia remembered what had happened yesterday and her smile changed to a deep sigh. Yesterday Bunny Rabbit had been chosen to lead the Maypole Dance. Petunia had hoped and hoped to win that honor, herself. In fact everyone had agreed that Petunia would be the best leader.

Then Bunny had moved into the neighborhood and the world. She was slender and pretty with big, soft brown eyes. She was a trained dancer and knew all kinds of fancy steps. So, when the election was held, Bunny Rabbit received one more vote than Petunia, and poor Petunia's hopes were shattered. All year she had looked forward to May Day and leading the Maypole Dance.

Petunia was still sighing as she stepped out of the front door on her way to school. Then she stopped with a little gasp of surprise.

A gay, bedribboned May Basket was hanging on the doorknob. It was the largest and most elegant basket Petunia had ever seen. It was made of wicker, with satin ribbons, and it was filled with sweets, marbled delights, and fragrant hyacinths.

"I wonder who could have given me this lovely, lovely basket?" Petunia murmured.

She looked and looked but she could not find the name of the sender.

"It must have been Porky," she decided finally. "I'll hurry to school and thank him."

Porky was waiting at the schoolroom gate when Petunia arrived proudly carrying the handsome basket.

"Oh, Porky!" Petunia cried. "Thanks ever and ever so much for this beautiful basket!"

Porky stared in bewilderment at the basket and his plump, little face flushed.

"But I didn't give you that basket, P. Petunia," he stammered. "I'll put mine on your desk."

Petunia ran into the school room, followed by the puzzled Porky. On her desk was a small, white paper basket, filled with sweet-smelling flowers. A card, "To Petunia from Porky" dangled from the handle.

[illegible] Petunia smiled [illegible] me the other one.

[illegible] Petunia," Bugs Bunny grinned, scurrying down the aisle and [illegible] against her desk.

"I don't know!" Petunia began. "You'd better know!" a loud voice interrupted.

Petunia, Bugs, and Porky turned to look in surprise at tall, pompous Sir Rodney who had walked up behind them. "You stole my basket," Petunia Pig.

Petunia's round face turned bright red with embarrassment. The faces of Bugs and Porky were red too but with anger not embarrassment.

"Don't you dare make me out a thief, Petunia!" Porky cried. "You know you wouldn't stoop anything so low!"

"Better watch what you're saying, sir," Bugs interjected.

"Somebody stole my basket before the contest, I know what I saw," Porky continued.

"Nobody gave it to PETUNIA," Sir Rodney exclaimed. "I bought that basket at the flower shop and I gave it to Petunia! I SAW IT! I was in her dressing room early this morning. Somebody must have gone and gave it to Petunia!".

He grabbed the basket and set it on the desk at the [illegible] right.

"It's yours, Petunia, from me!" he declared. "I'm going to [illegible] and keep it on' when I do, I'll . . ."

"Well, get busy on' do whatever you're going to do," Bugs drawled. "I took your old basket and gave it to Petunia. Petunia took Petunia's place as leader of the Maypole Dance, so I figured it was only right for Petunia to have Petunia's super-dooper May Basket."

Petunia Pig, Porky, Petunia and Sir Rodney recovered their voice first.

"But I don't want to take Petunia's place," she protested. "And I can't do it anyway because I hurt my foot. So Petunia will have to be the leader."

"Fine," Bugs agreed. "That means everything is hunky dory. Petunia'll lead the dance and Petunia's got her basket back, right?"

"Right" Petunia, Porky, Petunia, and Sir Rodney answered in unison.

Petunia looked at Porky's pretty [illegible] basket on her desk. She looked through the window at the beautiful sparkling day.

"Everything is really hunky dory!" she smiled happily.
